 Introduction: Good afternoon Mr. Whitworth and Mr. Tennenbaum. We are here today to present the findings from the questions presented to our team of Data Scientist. We will answer the nine questions provided ahead of time with our analysis and visualizations, as well as highlighting any key observations that came up during our review. With that, let us get started as we're excited to share with you the breakdown of our findings.

#suggestion for enhancement - rename name.x to beer_name, rename name.y to brewery_name

Answer 2 - Using merge() we brought in the Breweries csv file against the Beers csv file. The method used was when the two keys were not identical.

Agenda 2: Missing Values - Address the missing values in each column

merged_df %>% is.na() #check for missing values , ABV and IBU

#Cleaning the data
merged_df <- merged_df %>% na.omit()

merged_df %>% is.na() #check for missing values , ABV and IBU

Answer 3 - There were 62 missing values from column ABV, approximately three percent of the total. There were 1,005 missing values from column IBU. The data was review and we could not locate a relationship amongst the missing data and the qualifiers. Example, there did not appear to be an observable difference between data missing across the State data, or Brewery data. Overall, it appeared that the data was missing completely at random with no way of back tracking into an answer for the missing values.

Agenda 3: Mean ABV % - mean of ABV by State and bar chart

#create a new df to add Mean ABV %
merged_df1 <- merged_df %>% group_by(State) %>% summarize(meanABV = mean(ABV, na.rm = TRUE)) #add column meanABV with the mean of ABV.
#confirm meanABV has been added
merged_df1

the highest mean Alcohol by Volume % (ABV %) and Utah has the lowest ABV %. Each state was calculated and a label was added to show each. To prevent overlapping, the size of the mean labels were reduced.

Agenda 4: Mean IBU - mean of IBU by State and bar chart

#repeat with IBU
#create a new dataframe with
merged_df2 <- merged_df %>% group_by(State) %>% summarize(meanIBU = mean(IBU, na.rm = TRUE)) #add column meanIBU with the mean of IBU.

Answer 4b - West Virginia has the highest mean International Bitterness Units (IBU). Due to missing values, South Dakota had no data represented. The remaining states with data were calculated and a label was added to show each. To prevent overlapping, the size of the mean labels were reduced.

Agenda 5 - Finding the states with the most alcoholic beer and the most bitter beer.

#Which state has the maximum alcoholic (ABV) beer
merged_df %>% filter(!is.na(ABV))

summary statistics, the minimum value is 0.027, the 1st quartile value is 0.05, the Median value is 0.057, the 3rd Quarter is 0.068, the maximum value is 0.125. Valuable insight were also gotten from different categorical variables related to the ABV variable. Looking at the distribution based on the states, the state of Kentucky has the highest ABV value, the state of Oregon has the lowest ABV values, and there were 2 outliers in the plot, belonging the states of Kentucky and Oregon. Looking at the distribution based on the brewery ID, the Beer "London Balling" with brewery ID #2 has the highest alcoholic content, while the beer "Totally Randler" with brewery ID# 81 has the lowest alcoholic content.

#Visualizing the distribution based on the weight in ounces using a barplot merged_df %>% group_by(Ounces) %>% ggplot(aes(y = IBU, x = Ounces, fill = Ounces)) + geom_bar(stat = "identity") + ggtitle("The distribution of the IBU based on the weight of the beer drink (in ounces)")

The bar just shows the frequency distribution of the IBU for each weight
#Visualizing the distribution based on the IBU using a scatterplot merged_df %>% group_by(IBU) %>% ggplot(aes(y = ABV, x = IBU, color = State)) + geom_point() + ggtitle("The distribution of the ABV based on each IBU") + theme(legend.position = "none")

Results: Looking at the

summary statistics, the minimum value is 4, the 1st quartile value is 21, the Median value is 35, the 3rd Quarter is 64, the maximum value is 138. Valuable insight were also gotten from different categorical variables related to the ABV variable. Looking at the distribution based on the states, the state of Oregon has the highest ABV value, and the state of California has the lowest ABV values. Looking at the distribution based on the brewery ID, the Beer "Bitter Bth Imperial IPA" with brewery ID #2 has the highest alcoholic content, while the beer "Summer Solstice" with brewery ID# 81 has the lowest alcoholic content.

Agenda 7: Investigating the relationship between the ABV variable and IBU variable

#Visualizing the distribution based on the ABV vs. IBU using a scatterplot merged_df %>% group_by(IBU) %>% ggplot(aes(y = ABV, x = IBU, color = State)) + geom_point() + ggtitle("The distribution of t he ABV based on each IBU") + theme(legend.position = "none")

Results: There is a positive linear relationship between the bitterness of the beer and its alcoholic content. We can see from the plot above that for every high value in IBU there is a corresponding high value in ABV

Question 8: Budweiser would also like to investigate the difference with respect to IBU and ABV between IPAs (India Pale Ales) and other types of Ale (any beer with "Ale" in its name other than IPA). You decide to use KNN classification to investigate this relationship. Provide statistical evidence one way or the other. You can of course assume your audience is comfortable with percentages ... KNN is very easy to understand conceptually. In addition, while you have decided to use KNN to investigate this relationship (KNN is required) you may also feel free to supplement your response to this question with any other methods or techniques you have learned. Creativity and alternative solutions are always encouraged.

Using KNNs
set.seed(123)

Step 1: Data Preprocessing

#Extracting relevant data for the knn
Budweiser_df = merged_df %>% filter(str_detect(Style, "IPA") | (str_detect(Style, "Ale"))) #filtering the IPA and different ale beers using str_filter() & str_detect

#converting all IPA and Ale variables to groupnames Budweiser_df2 <- Budweiser_df %>% mutate(Style = case_when( grepl("IPA", Style, ignore.case = TRUE) ~ "IPA", grepl("Ale", Style, ignore.case = TRUE) ~ "Ale", TRUE ~ Style # Keep the original name if no match

Step 2: Data Exploration

#Visualizing the distribution of IBU and ABV values for the IPA and beers using a box plot
Budweiser_df2 %>% group_by(IBU) %>% ggplot(aes(y = IBU)) + geom_boxplot(color = 'violet') + ggtitle("The summary statistics of the IBU variable") + theme(legend.position = "none")

The summary statistics of the IBU variable

Budweiser_df2 %>% group_by(ABV) %>% ggplot(aes(y = ABV)) + geom_boxplot(color = 'purple') + ggtitle("The summary statistics of the ABV variable") + theme(legend.position = "none")

The summary statistics of the ABV variable

Budweiser_df2 %>% ggplot(aes(x = IBU, y = ABV,color = Style)) + geom_point() + ggtitle("Distribution of ABV vs. IBU")

Distribution of ABV vs. IBU

Step 3: Data Splitting
#sorting the datasets into training and test data, Using an 80-20 split split_perc <- 0.80
trainPosition = sample(1:nrow(Budweiser_df2)[1],round(split_perc * nrow(Budweiser_df2)[1])) #getting the index for the training dataset trainData <- Budweiser_df2[trainPosition, ]
testData <- Budweiser_df2[-trainPosition, ] trainData; testData

Conclusion

Utilizing various file manipulation, string manipulation and data visualization techniques, we were able to find valuable insight into the data of US craft beers and US breweries, over the past years.

We were able to discover the distribution of breweries and beers, across different US states. We were also able to address missing values within our generated data, and investigated the effectiveness of the missing values within the dataset. From our investigation, we proved that Removing the missing values didnt affect our data. Statistical analysis was done to find and visualize valuable statistical data like states that produced drinks with the highest average values of the Alcohol by Volume variable and the International Bitterness Unit Variable, the stateswith most alcoholic drink and the most bitter drink. We were able to provide more statistical insight into the Alcohol by beverage data, by looking into their mean, maximum and minimum values, and looking into how they affect different variables like the IBU, the brewery ID, and the states.

Lastly we were able to use kNN, and a ttest to prove that there is a significant relationship between the IPA drinks and the Ale drinks.
